For a breakdown of how this might impact you, please read the Anchorage Daily News article.

Alaska CHARR Safety Guidelines

Alongside the new Anchorage mask mandate, Alaska CHARR recommends that businesses take extra precautionary and preventative safety measures, including adopting the Alaska Hospitality Promise. Department of Health & Social Services Commissioner, Adam Crum, released a statement yesterday that has appeared in news publications around the state and specifically called out bars as being high-risk locations. With the large increase in cases, we greatly encourage business owners to implement additional measures to protect employees and the public, and to prevent a potential secondary industry shutdown, which has happened in other states like Texas. Some additional steps to consider might include having employees wear face coverings (in areas where it's not already mandated), increasing cleaning and sanitation, increasing physical distancing between tables and seating areas (along with employees and patrons when/where possible), limiting capacity, and reimplementing logging of customers.
